

G-UNITY SCHOLARSHIP RECIPIENT

CAMILE SOLOMON

“If I had taken a break from high school, I’m not sure I would have found my way to college. This scholarship was a blessing for my family and me.”

A 2005 graduate of the Arts and Humanities Campus Magnet High School, Camile Solomon enjoys a challenge. When she learned her new school didn’t have an orchestra, she put aside the violin and taught herself to play the clarinet, so she could join the band. She also found time to manage her school’s yearbook, organize several senior trips and serve as secretary for the basketball team. Outside of school, she helped raise funds for her church, where she also sings in the choir.

An early interest in modeling and acting laid the foundation for Camile’s new drive to enter broadcast journalism. To prepare herself, she has been taking courses in the Department of Speech Communication and Theatre Arts, where she noted that the professors “know how to take my talents to a higher level. They have real-world experience, so I know that their criticism is constructive.”

Juggling her classes, a part-time job, choir practice and modeling in charity fashion shows, Camile hopes that she can inspire other students to look beyond the classroom for experiences that will help them learn and grow.
